Subject: Fragrance chemical nominated for NTP studies

Dear Dr. Masten,

I agree with Betty Bridges that Iso E Super is important to study for toxicity by NTP. This and other fragrance chemicals have received far too little attention because of lack of regulatory authority over these extremely biologically active chemicals which are applied directly to the skin and often volatilize into the air, exposing large numbers of inadvertently exposed persons.

Respectfully,

>Iso E Super is one of the 14 chemicals that have been recommended for study by the National Toxicology Program (NTP). This material is widely used in scented products of all types. It was recommended for study because of its widespread use and exposure, lack of available health and data, and its structural similarity to other compounds in which at least one has serious effects.
